Lawrence Brown Sr., original member of Harold Melvin & the Blue Notes

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Lawrence Lloyd Brown Sr., an original member of the rhythm-and-blues group Harold Melvin & the Blue Notes, died of a respiratory condition. He was 63.

Brown was still performing with the Blue Notes until January, when he became ill while singing at a show in Chester.

He died Sunday, according to the Mitchum-Wilson Funeral Home. Harold Melvin & the Blue Notes are known for songs including "I Miss You," "If You Don't Know Me by Now," "The Love I Lost," "Bad Luck" and "Wake up Everybody."

Despite frequent changes in personnel, including Teddy Pendergrass becoming the group's lead singer in the '70s, Brown remained its second tenor.

He began singing and dancing as a child in Philadelphia.

"Lawrence's dreams as a performer truly became reality," his family said in an obituary. "Although he will be sorely missed, this talented, funny, life-loving man will live on in the hearts of all those who knew and loved him — and the magic that inspired him."

Brown, who lived in North Philadelphia, is survived by a wife and son.
