H. Leaman Bair Jr.

Milton S. Goldstein

Milton S. Goldstein, 90, of Lancaster, died on Friday, May 2, 2008 at his home. He was the husband of the late Thelma (Weinman) Goldstein, an active volunteer in both Lancaster and regional Jewish communities. Mrs. Goldstein died on November 9, 2002. They were married for 59 years.

Born in Baltimore, MD on December 20, 1917, he was the son of the late Leonard and Anna (Goldstein) Goldstein.

Mr. Goldstein was an active member of Temple Beth El, Lancaster and of B'nai Brith. He proudly served his country in the United States Army Air Force during WWII. Mr. Goldstein was decorated for his service in the Pacific where he was involved in numerous campaigns including the invasion of the Philippines.

After the war, Mr. Goldstein became the president and owner of the former Empire Shoe Manufacturing Company in Elizabethtown. Through his work in the shoe industry, in 1974, Goldstein was appointed by the secretary of Commerce to the Industry Sector Advisory Committee on Leather and Leather Products. The committee advised the White House and testified before Congress on various trade issues.

Mr. Goldstein was also a leader in breaking down barriers in the workplace. He was among the first employers in Elizabethtown to hire Hispanic employees. Goldstein was instrumental in the hiring of the first African-American professor at Elizabethtown College. For his efforts to fight racism and bigotry he was awarded numerous honors by local and national organizations. He also was awarded the Humanitarian Service Award by the United Cerebral Palsy for his devoted service.

Surviving are two children, David J. Goldstein, married to Lisa Heid, of Indianapolis, IN, his children, Benjamin, Philip, and Rachel; and Shari E. Goldstein, of West Paterson, NJ, and her children, Louis, Alana and Lori. He is also survived by one great-grandchild and one brother, Ephraim Goldstein, of FL. Funeral services will be held

Is it OK for dealer to 'borrow' parts off the lot?

Dear Tom and Ray:

On Saturday I selected a brand-new Honda Accord from a local dealer here in Hawaii and gave them my down payment. I was to pick it up last night. But as I was on my way over to get it, they called me to say that they had taken some parts out of the car to put into another car that came in for service.

My car is undrivable until they can put in the replacement parts. My sales guy did not know what parts they removed. According to him, some lines of communication were crossed, and my sales guy was not aware that the car had been "cannibalized."

He assured me that they would be putting in brand-new parts and that there would be no problems. Is it normal for a dealer to just take parts out of a new car sitting on the lot to service a car of the same model year that came in for service?

Being in Hawaii, I understand that parts often take longer to arrive than on the mainland, but this practice seems shady. I got a fair price on the car, I like the car and, were it not for this incident, I would have been quite pleased to hand over my money. However, this cannibalization/parting out gives me pause. Is this just an inconvenience, or should I ask for my deposit back? —Elmira

TOM: It depends on what parts they took out, Elmira. If they took out something that "pops out" easily, like a computer, an alternator or a radio, then it's no big deal. There are lots of dealerships that do that.

RAY: But if it's a major engine or transmission part, and to get at it they had to dismantle the engine or transaxle, then I'd pick a different car. If they removed the crankshaft from your car, for example, or a synchro from inside the transmission, that means they opened up stuff they shouldn't be opening up.

TOM: And I wouldn't buy a "new" car that had had its engine or transmission rebuilt by a local dealer. They can't possibly rebuild it any better

TOM: And the fact that they confessed and told you what happened instead of making up some story about "letting the individual atoms of rust protectant settle into their preferred molecular alignment for an extra day" suggests they're being honest with you.

RAY: So, Elmira, ask for a little more information. And as long as it's not an internal engine or transaxle part that they lifted, I'd accept the car and not worry about it.

Dear Tom and Ray:

Even though we live in Virginia, where we rarely get more than a few inches of snow, on occasion we do get a big storm. We had a storm last winter where we got eight inches of snow.

My husband and I have a long gravel driveway, and rather than shovel the whole thing my hubby likes to take the car and run it up and down this 60-foot driveway to compact the snow. To do this requires getting a good run, because the driveway goes up a slight slope.

My question is: Does it hurt the car when he gets stuck revs the engine and makes the tires spin? He will do this over and over again, spinning the tires for what I feel is an extended period of time. We have a new car, and I don't want him to ruin it! —Karin

TOM: Oh, Karin, I hate to tell you this, but he's probably having the time of his life. This is his version of PlayStation 2. He's pretending he's a rally driver, trying to see how far he can make it up the driveway (to him, Pikes Peak). Sliding around and spinning the wheels are half the fun.

RAY: If he's spinning the wheels to the point where you can see smoke or smell burning rubber, then he certainly is shortening the life of the tires. He's probably not doing any other damage, though, unless he's revving the engine up near its red line or flinging up gravel and chipping the paint.

TOM: But here's a solution he may go for. Get him to buy a set of temporary chains. They attach to the driven wheels of the car, and they give you very good traction in the snow. He can even put them on the night before a storm and be ready to go the next morning. It won't be quite as challenging to make it up the driveway, but maybe

Kenneth Ransbottom

Kenneth Ransbottom, of Dothan, AL, passed away April 30, 2008. He was the son of the late Richard Ransbottom and Pearl Ransbottom of Lancaster. He is survived by one son TC Ransbottom.

Also surviving are one brother Rick Ransbottom, of Dothan AL, four sisters, Barb Mikens of Albuquerque, NM, Dawn Roberts and Deborah Bair, both of Lancaster and Sandy Graver of Willow St.; also a half brother Doug Glass, of Quarryville.

and to get at it they had to dismantle the engine or transaxle, then I'd pick a different car. If they removed the crankshaft from your car, for example, or a synchro from inside the transmission, that means they opened up stuff they shouldn't be opening up.

TOM: And I wouldn't buy a "new" car that had had its engine or transmission rebuilt by a local dealer. They can't possibly rebuild it any better than it was built at the factory. They only can make it worse. I've got drawers full of "extra" parts that were "leftover" after engine rebuilds.

RAY: So, you need to find out what parts they "borrowed" from your car. My guess is it's something that goes on and off relatively easily. And you're probably right, that they were waiting for a part to arrive from the mainland and rather than have a customer with a brand-new car have to wait days to get his car back, they "borrowed" the part from an unsold car on the lot with the intent to replace it when the part arrived.

he's revving the engine up near its red line or flinging up gravel and chipping the paint.

TOM: But here's a solution he may go for. Get him to buy a set of temporary chains. They attach to the driven wheels of the car, and they give you very good traction in the snow. He can even put them on the night before a storm and be ready to go the next morning. It won't be quite as challenging to make it up the driveway, but maybe he can pretend he's a superhero with magic powers ("Nothing can stop the snow-chained Harold!").

RAY: The chains aren't something you'd want to use on the plowed streets, because they'd be unsafe, noisy and uncomfortable, and they'd make your teeth chatter. So he'd take them off after clearing the driveway and toss them in the garage until next time. But for driving through actual snow they're hard to beat.
