Helen R. (Richardson) Metzler

Helen R. (Richardson) Metzler, 95, of Lancaster, passed away on Monday, February 25, 2008 at the Mennonite Home. Born in Harrisburg, PA, she was the daughter of the late Frank Irvin and Margaret Baughman Richardson. She was the wife of the late Robert S. Metzler.

She received her teaching certification and Bachelor's degree from Shippensburg State University and her Masters and Associate degree from Penn State University. Helen was a Professor Emeritus from Millersville University. Prior to that, she taught third grade at Manheim Twp. Elementary School. Her specialty at Millersville University was Reading and Language Arts.

Helen was an avid sports enthusiast who faithfully followed the Philadelphia Phillies and the Philadelphia Eagles. She liked to watch Penn State football games, and also enjoyed reading mysteries and biographies. Her other interests included the Civil War, antique post cards and Beatrix Potter figurines. She took great pride in her home, and it was always beautifully decorated for the holidays. Helen and her late husband were benefactors to many, especially Millersville University, Shippensburg University and Penn State University.

Mrs. Metzler is survived by her son, Duwayne R. Litz of Rehoboth Beach, DE and grandchildren: Adrienne Barto, Lancaster; wife of Jere; Jennifer Bates, Lititz, wife of Thomas; and Justin Litz, Exton, husband of Chryssa. Seven great grandchildren, Theodore, Taylor, Colin, Jourdan, Christian, Kyler and Eleni. Helen also leaves behind caregivers, Linda Schopf, Millersville; Nancy Thomas, Conestoga and Christine Esh of Lancaster.

Services will be held at the Charles F. Snyder Funeral Home Inc., 441 North George Street, Millersville, PA 17551, 717-872-5041 on Friday, February 29, 2008 at 10:00 AM.

Pearl Duncan

Pearl Duncan, age 76, of Lancaster, PA, formerly of Middletown, NJ, passed away unexpectedly on Tuesday at the Lancaster General Hospital.

Born in Newark, NJ, she was the daughter of the late Preston and Emma McLeod Dawson and the wife of the late James Willis Duncan, who died in May 1991.

Pearl was a graduate of Malcolm X. Shabazz High School in Newark, NJ. She was employed in the 1980-90's as a teacher's aide for the Middletown Township School District in New Jersey.

She was a member of Old First Church in Newark.

Pearl loved art and creating different paintings using oil, watercolor, charcoal and ceramics. She was an avid reader, especially biographies. Due to her love of art, she took classes at the Newark Museum and the Lancaster Museum of Art. Along with her interest in African Culture and history, she traveled to Ghana. One of her many pleasures in life were spending time with her grandsons.

Surviving are a son, Mark, husband of Christina Duncan, Millersville; two grandsons, James and Samuel Duncan; three sisters, Ruth Galloway (Joe) Wappinger Falls, NY, Mildred Thomas, Elizabeth, NJ, Carolyn Dawson, Newark, NJ; two brothers, Clyde Dawson, West Orange, NJ and Carl Sharif (Alberta), Newark, NJ. Pearl was the oldest of six children.

Relatives and friends are respectfully invited to attend Pearl's funeral service at Old First Church, 820 Broad St., Newark, NJ on Saturday, Mar. 1, 2008 at 10:00 AM with Rev. Tom Patton officiating. Interment in Evergreen Cemetery, Hillside, NJ. Friends may call at the church from 9:00 AM until time of service. A memorial gathering of friends and family will take place on Sunday, March 16, 2008 from 5:30-7:00 PM at the Lancaster Museum of Art, 135 N. Lime St., Lancaster, PA.

William F. Buckley Jr., conservative icon, 82

BY HILLEL ITALIE
AP National Writer

NEW YORK — William F. Buckley Jr., the erudite Ivy League and conservative herald who showered huge and scornful words on liberalism as he observed, abetted and cheered on the right's post-World War II rise from the fringes to the White House, died Wednesday. He was 82.

His assistant Linda Bridges said Buckley was found dead by his cook at his home in Stamford, Conn. The cause of death was unknown, but he had been ill with emphysema, she said.

Editor, columnist, novelist, debater, TV talk show star of "Firing Line," harpsichordist, transoceanic sailor and even a good-natured loser in a New York mayor's race, Buckley worked at a daunting pace, taking as little as 20 minutes to write a column for his magazine, the National Review.

Yet on the platform, he was all handsome, reptilian languor, flexing his imposing vocabulary ever so slowly, vociferating each point with an arched brow or rolling tongue and savoring an opponent's discomfort with wide-eyed glee.

"I am, I fully grant, a phenomenon, but not because of any speed in composition," he wrote in The New York Times Book Review in 1986. "I asked myself the other day, 'Who else, on so many issues, has been so right so much of the time?' I couldn't think of anyone."

After hearing the news, President Bush remembered Buckley as one of America's finest writers and thinkers.

"He influenced a lot of people, including me," Bush said in the Oval Office. "He captured the imagination of a lot of people."

Bush said he talked with Buckley's son, Christopher, on the phone to express condolences. "Christopher said his dad died at his desk," Bush said. "He said his dad died a peaceful death."

Buckley had for years been withdrawing from public life, starting in 1990 when he stepped down as top editor of the National Review. In Deberg. "You've got to end some time, and I'd just as soon not die onstage," he told the audience.

"For people of my generation, Bill Buckley was pretty much the first intelligent, witty, well-educated conservative one saw on television," fellow conservative William Kristol, editor of the Weekly Standard, said at the time the show ended. "He legitimized conservatism as an intellectual movement and therefore as a political movement."

Fifty years earlier, few could have imagined such a triumph. Conservatives had been marginalized by a generation of discredited stands — from opposing Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal to the isolationism that preceded the U.S. entry into World War II. Liberals so dominated intellectual thought that critic Lionel Trilling claimed there were "no conservative or reactionary ideas in general circulation."

Buckley founded the bi-weekly magazine National Review in 1955, declaring that he proposed to stand "athwart history, yelling 'Stop' at a time when no one is inclined to do bending anti-Communism and free market economics, his persona was a dynamic break from such dour right-wing predecessors as Sen. Robert Taft.

Although it perpetually lost money, the National Review built its circulation from 16,000 in 1957 to 125,000 in 1964, the year conservative Sen. Barry Goldwater was the Republican presidential candidate. The magazine claimed a circulation of 155,000 when Buckley relinquished control in 2004, citing concerns about his mortality, and over the years the National Review attracted numerous young writers. Some remained conservative (George Will, David Brooks), and some didn't (Joan Didion, Garry Wills).

"I was very fond of him," Didion said Wednesday. "Everyone was, even if they didn't agree with him."

Relief is available for dry eyes

DEAR DR. GOTT: Please enlighten me about "dry eye." I have worn glasses for more than 60 years without any problems. I am 87 years old, and about two months ago, I had cataract surgery on both eyes. The left eye has developed "dry eye." My doctor told me to use eye drops and warm compresses. The pharmacies have umpteen brands and prices to choose from. What kind of drops should I use? How many times a day should they be used? Can this condition lead to anything more serious, such as detached retina? In addition to the eye being dry, it burns and itches, testing my patience not to rub it!

Dr. Peter Gott

DEAR READER: Dry eye can have several causes. Most cases are caused by a lack of tear production. Others are caused when the tears do not contain the appropriate mix of substances (primarily water, oils and mucus) that make normal tears. Eyelid disorders, medications and environmental factors also can lead to dry eyes.

Regardless of cause, the outcome is that the tear film that covers the eye and allows for good vision no longer functions properly. It develops dry spots that cause a variety of symptoms, such as burning, itching, sensitivity to light, stringy mucus in or around the eye and more. Some people may also experience constant tearing. This may seem a contradiction, but, in fact, these extra tears, known as reflex tears, are of poor quality. They are mostly water and lead to increased irritation and dry-eye symptoms.

Treatment depends on the cause of the dry eye. Lack of tear production can often be treated by using over-the-counter artificial tears. In some cases, prescription eye drops must be used. Some individuals choose to have their tear ducts, which drain away tears, closed. This can be done with silicone plugs or by cauterizing the area. Others still may benefit from customized contact lenses that cover the white area (sclera) of the eye and create fluid-filled layers over the corneas, which keeps them well lubricated. In severe cases, doctors may prescribe steroid drops.

If treatment fails to improve the condition significantly, doctors must start looking for other causes, such as certain medications.

These include diuretics, antihistamines, sleeping and birth-control pills, tricyclic antidepressants, certain acne drugs and pain relievers such as morphine. Rarely, an autoimmune disorder may be the cause of dry eye. Only your physician can tell you whether this is a possibility.

There are several self-care tips for individuals with dry eyes.

Avoid air blowing into your eyes; this will only make your tears evaporate faster. Wear glasses on windy days to reduce air flow to the eye.

Avoid rubbing your eyes; this will further irritate them and can introduce foreign material.

Use eye drops before doing any visually demanding activity, such as reading or working on a computer. Eye drops can be used several times a day or hour. Preservative-free drops generally work best and reduce the chance of allergic reaction.

And finally, remember to blink. This spreads tears evenly over the eye. Consciously increase your blink rate, especially when doing visually demanding activities.

Chronic dry eye, while generally harmless, can lead to infection, inflammation and, rarely, scarring of the cornea. With proper care and treatment, this can often be prevented.
